SOMETIMES THE SUSTAINABLE CHOICE IS ALSO THE MOST AESTHETICALLY PLEASING ONE. Such was the case with a residence on Lopez Island in Puget Sound, a waterfront vacation home draped in reclaimed old-growth wood. "It's a stunningly beautiful site," says architect Joseph Greene, principal in charge, who designed a two-part program for the house along with associates Nancy Greene and Todd Kegerreis that would take advantage of the views and respect the surrounding environment.
