

ARCHITECTURAL DIGEST

February 2012

A MINIMALIST BEVERLY HILLS HOME

An entrepreneur with a yen for simplicity and order calls on designer James Magni to turn a Los Angeles home into an ultramodern haven

Text by Mayer Rus | Photography by Nikolas Koenig | Produced by Robert Rufino

The sleek kitchen, composed of oak and stainless steel, represents a collaboration between Magni and Haefele Design. The barstools are by Mark Albrecht Studio, and the ovens are by Miele.

In some homes a sense of spirituality in decor is defined by dream catchers, meditation stones, wind chimes, and twisty stalks of lucky bamboo. The impeccably restrained Beverly Hills, California, house that designer James Magni renovated for a young dynamo in the health-food business interprets that concept in a completely different language. This is a place where serenity and otherworldliness are a function of pristine open spaces, seamless fields of white stone, sunlight, water, and sky.