WHEN VENTURE CAPITALIST Steven Stull and his wife, Claire, a former interior designer, decided to move from New Orleans to California's Napa Valley, they fell in love with a view. It was a serious stunner—from the 40-acre site 1,000 feet above the Cabernet-producing district of Stag's Leap, they could see mountains, vineyards, and even San Francisco, almost 50 miles away. "The minute we set foot here," says Claire, "we knew this place was for us."
